NEW-YORKISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent. NEW YORK, Oct. 5, 1869. The Bull that was a Cow.

The local columns of yesterday's newspapers were largely devoted to the mad doings of an animal that was stated to be a bull. According to the reports, the animal behaved worse than any bull ever did at a Spanish bull-fight, acting as though all Broadway and Chatham street were a matador and he were charging at it. He first got loose in Centre street, where a lot of boys vented a large quantity of adolescent brutality upon him, and drove him out of his bovine propriety. After tossing several of them in various directions (still following the accounts), he dashed around the City Hall Park miscellaneously, as though he had a peculiar spite against the new Post Office. Pursued by a cruel crowd, who were in for a good time, he next dashed down Spruce street to Burling Slip, when he suddenly changed his mind, and, instead of jumping in, as his pursuers expected, dashed back again to the Bowery, kicking up his hoofs resplendently. By this time the noise of discharged firearms was heard, and the "bull," making a rapid transit through Worth street, put in another appearance in the Park. Like General Washington among the Indians, the beast seemed to bear a charmed life. Pistols and rifles were levelled at him in vain. He seemed invulnerable. Men, women, and children he tossed with that absence of effort which characterizes the best endeavors of art. Occasionally he varied his performances by going into Broadway, and endeavoring to secure private apartments at the Astor House. At length, at the corner of Chatham and New Chambers streets, he met his death. It came in the shape of revolvers (of the regulation pattern) and axes-the sharpest meat ones that could be procured. Yesterday I went up to take a look at it, and discovered, not a bull, but a poor old superannuated cow, with no horns at all, and with its throat cut! "Rip Van Winkle," I believe, has occasion to mention a cow that was a bull, and the New York newspapers have certainly made mention of a built that was a cow, on the supposition that the animal I saw yesterday was the one that created the devastation on Sunday. The New York Club.

This club, which was once the most fashion able and exclusive in New York, is said to be on the eve of a decline. Some of the most able and brilliant men in all those departments of life where exertion brings a man into prominence were once among its members. Of late years, however, the stringency of the rules regulating admission to it have very much relaxed. The reason manifestly is that the restaurant department was tremendously expensive, and additional members were necessary in order to lefray them. Consequently the old exclusivwas destroyed. It is probable, however, and a new club will be formed upon the rulas of the old. Indeed, the construction of a new club from the best members of the New York and Union Clubs is already being discussed. There are a good many wealthy who have intimated their willingness to subscribe liberally toward an affair of this kind, but I doubt whether so exclusive a clique as it is desired to make of it would flourish long in this city. We have plenty of people who have plenty of money, but there are comparatively few of these who have education and culture enough to render an elegant lonnging place, as a lounging place, a success. The transition from lounging to loading is easy and inevitable among that large class of young and wealthy New Yorkers whose brains are a vacuum to which nature has not shown her usual abhorrence by filling it up. Consequently exclusive clubs, In this city, must, for the next generation or so, if they aspire to much splendor, become, sooner or later, exclusive failures.

Lord Hubert Ainsley. Ever since the famous Penniman and De Bre- | 22 Chething in Philadelphia. mont case, which shook fashionable Gotham from boot to bonnet, there has been a very natural suspicion entertained in regard to the family history of those numerous titled young men who come to this country and flutter for a season or two among the wealthiest families of Fifth avenue and Murray Hill. Before the final settlement is made and Philander and Phillis are married, papa is excusably anxious about his prospective son-in-law's pedigree, and consults the "British Peerage" with a trepidation which every father similarly circumstanced can sympathize with. This is precisely what all the newspaper men have been doing with respect to Lord Hubert Ainsley, a charming young gentleman who one day last week gave a dejeuner a la fourchette, in which the "spread" was upon a white corded silk table-cloth, and the bills of fare were printed on pink satin edged with gold frill. This was all very interesting, but it did not satisfy the reporter of the period. This ingenuous individual consulted the "British Peerage" in vain. No Lord Ainsley appeared there, and the Bohemian cry now is, "Is Lord Hubert Ainsley a lord or not a lord?" Leaving those who raised the question to answer it, I would merely remark that another titled gentleman, the Baron Henri de Riviere, has been getting himself into trouble. I don't think he married an American girl. Neither were the wedding ceremonies performed in a police court, as they usually are with titled adventurers in this country. He attached to himself as his wife-the trifling consideration of the ceremony only being omitted-a beautiful French girl named Mad'lle Helene Stille. He not only won her affections, but also some seven or eight thousand dollars she had by her. After living for a couple of years in Paris as man and wife, he persuaded her to accompany him to Lima, Peru There they remained for a few months, and then returned to Paris, where the Baron seemed to grow weary of the little lady and finally ran off from her and steered for this port. Hither she followed him, and having ascertained that he was stopping at the New York Hotel, laid complaint before Justice Dowling. That gentleman sent three deputy sheriffs in quest of him, and he is now incarcerated, awaiting trial on a charge of having unlawfully approprlated Mad'lle Stille's seventy-five hundred dollars. Madame Gazzaniga.

It has become somewhat the fashion of late to bestow pity on this faded cantatrice, who, during the last year or two, has settled down into one of the most successful teachers of music in this city. The commiscration is ill-spent. After the death of the Marquis de Malesperia, whose wife she was, she married Signor Albites, an accomplished musician, and last summer the two took a trip to Italy for the purpose of adjusting certain claims which Madame Albites had upon her dead husband's estate. The adjustment of those claims has resulted in Madame Albites' possession of a fortune sufficient to maintain her independently during the remainder of her existence. That Serious French Opera.

their manager, penniless in a foreign country, what the deuce are they to do? To-morrow night they are going to appear at the Academy in Le Songe d'une Nuit d'Ete, and on Friday evening in Robert le Diable. With the proceeds they are going to scoot back to Paris again by the next steamer that sails, there to rehearse the frightful manner in which the perfidious Americans have treated them.

Last night Mrs. Scott-Siddons appeared as 'Viola" in Twelfth Night. The audience was not large, for that would be an impossibility in a bandbox like the Fifth Avenue. But it was erowded, and Mrs. Siddons looked very sweet

HOVER'S PATENT

Combination Sofa Bed

Is decidedly the best Sofa Bed ever invented. It can be extended from a Sofa into a handsome French Bedstead, with hair spring mattress, in ten seconds of time. It requires no unscrewing or detaching, has no separation between back and seat, no cords to brask, and no hinged root attached to the top of the back to support it when down, which is unsafe and liable to get out of repair. It has the conveniences of a bureau for holding clothing, is easily managed, and it is impossible for it to get out of certific.

Price about the same as an ordinary sofa.
